

Mary,

I hope that this note finds you, your families, and your friends safe in the aftermath of Hurricane Sandy. For those of you who were affected, I hope that you have been able to make progress toward recovery. As we all know, the impact of Hurricane Sandy has devastated families and communities along the East Coast, including many of our own employees and partners, neighborhoods and communities right here in New York City.

The Clinton Foundation and the Clinton Global Initiative (CGI) are taking action to support our communities in New York, by bringing people and organizations together on November 18 for a Day of Action for New York. We will be working with friends, partners and local community members, with the goal of mobilizing 1,000 people to make a meaningful difference in an area hard hit by Sandy.

We hope you'll join us, including my father and me, and commit to helping our communities. Recovery will not be easy for our city or the larger Northeast, but with our collective efforts, we can contribute to making real progress for our communities. If you are unable to join us on Sunday and still want to help with recovery efforts, please continue to check our website for ways you can show your support and get involved.

Sign up to volunteer today. And please pass this message along to your friends and networks that are willing to help. As we know through our own work, when we bring people together, we can make a greater impact than any one of us could make on our own. If you have any questions about the project, or for other ways you can support our Day of Action, please contact SandyVolunteers@clintonglobalinitiative.org.

Thank you,
Chelsea Clinton
