9/11 Memorial Museum Dedication Period May 15, 2014 to May 20, 2014

Dear Friend,

The National September 11 Memorial Museum will open to the public on Wednesday, May 21, 2014. It is important to us that those who are so close to the history of 9/11 are provided with the opportunity to visit the Museum before it opens to the general public. To this end, prior to the public opening, we will be holding a Dedication Period from Thursday, May 15 through Tuesday, May 20 that includes special previews of the Museum for:

- Family members whose loved ones were killed in the attacks of September 11, 2001 or February 26, 1993
- 9/11 rescue and recovery workers who participated in the response at the World Trade Center, Fresh Kills Landfill, the Pentagon, or Flight 93 crash site
- Active duty first responders from agencies that lost members in the 9/11 attacks
- Survivors of the 9/11 attacks
- Current lower Manhattan (below Canal Street) residents or business owners, or those who were residents or business owners in lower Manhattan during the 9/11 attacks

The Dedication Period previews will be free, but reservations are required. Upon entry, you will be asked to provide identification. A ceremony within the Museum will begin the Dedication Period on Thursday, May 15. Since the capacity for the ceremony is also limited given the Museum's space constraints, we are holding a lottery for all members of the above groups who are interested in attending the ceremony.

If you are a member of one of the groups listed above, you may reserve your free ticket(s) to preview the Museum during the Dedication Period and enter the lottery for the ceremony at www.911memorial.org/dedication.

During the Dedication Period, the Museum will remain open 24 hours per day, which will serve as a small tribute to the thousands of Ground Zero rescue and recovery workers who worked around the clock in the aftermath of 9/11 as the city, the nation, and the world supported them. This will also help ensure the Museum is as accessible as possible to those who wish to visit.

We look forward to sharing the Museum with you.

Warm Regards,

Joe Daniels
